of New York City and to explore the possibility of restoring some to health, employment, and a normal place in the community. Among the findings is a suggestion that many of the supposed characteristics of skid row life are merely attributes of poverty and aging.

Environmental Quality and Food Supply, edited by P. L. White & D. Robbins. Futura Publ. Co., Mount Kisco, NY, 1974, 248 pages, $13.95.

This is another volume developed under the aegis of the Council on Food and Nutrition of the American Medical Assn. A previous one titled "Nutritional Qualities of Fresh Fruits and Vegetables" was listed here previously. This book has the additional sponsorship of the Council on Environment, Occupational and Public Health of the AMA. There are 21 excellent chapters dealing with ecosystems, their pollution, the contamination of the food chain, diseconomies in energy use, and even carcinogenic risks.

ETHEL PERCY ANDRUS GERONTOLOGY CENTER
LEONARD DAVIS SCHOOL OF GERONTOLOGY
UNIVERSITY OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

The Ethel Percy Andrus Gerontology Center, a multidisciplinary research and training facility of the University of Southern California, is pleased to announce the establishment of the Leonard Davis School of Gerontology. The School expects to enroll its first full-time students in the fall of 1975.

The Andrus Center is now recruiting additional faculty to staff the new school: Associate Dean, four Assistant Professors, one each in social work, clinical psychology, planning and administration and physiology. Doctorates required.

Candidates should send vitae and inquiries to:

Albert G. Feldman, Ph.D., Deputy Director
Andrus Gerontology Center
